"Kline Galland saved my life."

An interview with John Hinterberger described as “miraculous.” Here are just a few examples of the kind of a lifestyle feature into their regular circulation. In the meantime, at the Seattle Times, I really liked. Then Lou Guzzo, Arts & Entertainment Editor, knowing I had a Master’s in Sports Editor, had taken a liking to me and offered me a job as summer replacement for the _Sports_ section. While I was there, they really liked my writing and my writing style.

Drama, tabbed me to replace his departing art critic. At that point, papers all around the country started looking for ways to incorporate restaurant reviews. They can each do one a month.” So that’s how it started. So that’s how they came to this. And then the _Times_ decided they wanted to do one a week. That’s how they came to this. So that’s how it started. I continued to do that for the _Seattle Times_ and they never asked me about it going. That stupid little column was worth more to them in terms of exposure to other reporters’ stories regardless of how good they were.

THE WRITE STUFF

I started writing to her each and every day. I had to borrow a typewriter – I learned what the weekends were like, etcetera. By the time I got to college at UConn as an undergrad, I was already writing almost habitually. Pixie (Priscilla was her name) and I found a little embarrassing because I thought they were frivolous. I mean, anyone can do it. You go out and go into a place. You look around the neighborhood, etcetera. All that stuff is fun and it’s easy and it attracted an enormous readership – which I was unaware of. I didn’t find out until one day later that the restaurant critic section of the newspaper had been the last good read part of newspapers in the Northwest. That continued until my 59th birthday (1993). That continued. And then I was looking for a way to do that. I was looking for an opportunity to do that. And then I found Kline Galland. And even today, when people say, “I wish I had someplace like Kline Galland,” they mean Kline Galland, which is one of those remarkable organizations with a long history of helping people who don’t have it so good. The only person that came close was Dear Abby. And since the _Seattle Times_ had a huge readership, they had to have a huge circulation. I found Kline Galland to be one of those remarkable organizations with a long history of helping people who don’t have it so good. They were not happy. The one that was different was Kline Galland. And even today, when people say, “I wish I had someplace like Kline Galland,” they mean Kline Galland, which is one of those remarkable organizations with a long history of helping people who don’t have it so good. They were not happy.

An unfortunate treatment and ensuing allergic reaction at a dental office resulted in a three-week hospitalization. The pain had subsided, the catheter was out, the blood had been finally drained from the fractured limb and I was home to to go for and start new care.

TENNIS WAS NO MATCH FOR JOHN.

John started playing tennis on red clay courts while stationed in Germany with the Special Forces. He admits to being easily frustrated with the game and took lessons, here in Seattle as well as Sun Valley. His schedule at the Times was flexible enough that he could play up to five times a week – often arriving at work in his warm-ups. John gained quite a reputation for being impatient on the court and, at times, as this photo documents, would simply throw his racket. Game, set, match.
At Kline Galland, we are an organization that prides itself in looking at and to the big picture. We are focused not only on this year and the next; but we are also anticipating the wants, needs and demands our seniors will require in and from their health care. We continue to evolve quality of life and our quality of care for family and friends throughout our Jewish and Greater communities.

Our Senior Care Resource Line (206-723-INFO), created through the generosity of donors, is but one example of how we are leading the way in simplifying modern-day senior care. Be it for Independent, Assisted Living or Memory Support at The Summit ... Rehab or Long-Term Care at Kline Galland Home... Home Health, Home Care, Palliative Care or Hospice delivered through our Community Based Services; one call does it all. Our senior care advocates help you navigate the full spectrum of community services, be it for information or in a crisis. At last count, this no-cost, no-obligation community service is receiving over 900 calls annually – connecting families to crucial services with clarity and expediency. As Your Single-Source Senior Care Resource,"™ that’s a picture we can all be proud of.

One final note – it warms our hearts to have John Hinterberger’s incredible story in this issue of Chai Lites. We are humbled by his observation, “I felt very much at home at Kline Galland.”
